Accept the YouTube Terms and Conditions.

Terms and conditions

These terms regarding live streaming (the "Terms") are for you, the content provider that has contracted with Google ("You"), through the Content License Agreement, Content Hosting Services Agreement, Sound Recording and Audiovisual Agreement, Channel Distribution Agreement and/or the YouTube Terms of Service (any of which are referred to below as the "Agreement"). Through the live streaming account feature, You may live stream content (the "Live Content") through Your YouTube channel and You may be provided with the option of archiving the Live Content for subsequent viewing (the "Archived Content"). The Live Content must comply with the YouTube Community Guidelines. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Agreement, You represent and warrant that You have all necessary rights for the exploitation of the Live Content on the Google Services throughout the world, including, without limitation, music licensing rights from artists, record labels, publishers (including public performance licenses) and any other royalty participants. You agree to comply with all applicable laws, rules and regulations regarding the Live Content. The Live Content and the Archived Content, if any, will constitute "Provider Content," "Original Channel Content," or "Your Content" as applicable, pursuant to your Agreement with Google and are subject to the terms of that Agreement. Provider warrants and represents that it has satisfied all regulatory requirements in the Live Stream Territory, including without limitation all licensing, registration or notification requirements, and will maintain such licenses (including any broadcast licenses), registrations, consents, notifications or approvals for the duration of the Live Stream Term.
